

The apple day

First experience to go picking apples in Japan.

One of the workers is explaining how to pick the apple.

One day I went to pick the apples with some other Mongolian friends at some Japanese person who runs apple business. I saw so many apple trees on the way to somewhere. Comparing with the Mongolia, In the Japan so many sweet fruits have cultivated. I've never imagined that I pick apples in Japan. And then a chance had found. First of all apple trees looked so beautiful and sweet.

During the November they should pick the apples. After picking the apples they distinguish them as a well grown and damaged. Then distinguished good apples sold and damaged apples used for juices or some other products made by apples. During picking apples I ate apples and those were so delicious.

Fuji apple is the sweetest apple as they told. Also, it is bigger than other apples grown in other countries. I also think Japanese apple is the biggest apple than the apples I saw. They also told me that most nutritious thing is in the core of the apple. When you divide the apple you can see different yellow color in that and this is the nutritious thing of apple.

When they make new sort of apple they mix the tree's roots. They told they mixed Fuji's apple tree's root with another apple tree's to make a new sort of apple. This sounds so cool because I don't have any skills about planting. Japanese planting environment is quite different than Mongolia's. I think it depends on the weather. Mongolia's weather changes great amount. For example, during the summertime, Mongolia's weather temperature is around from 25 to 35. On the other hand during the winter time celsius reaches -40. In addition, in Japan, so many beautiful and colorful flowers blossom. When I came to Japan at the outside of Iwate University I saw the pink roses and it seemed so nice.

I really love apples and things that made by apples in Japan. Maybe after I go back to Mongolia I will miss apple's taste so much.

I'm with one of my Mongolian friends.

Distinguished good apples.
